CALL FOR PAPERS for SPRING 2026

EDITION of LOGOS

September 2025

My name is Corbin Breeden, and I am the Editor-in-Chief of Logos: The Cornell Undergraduate Philosophy Journal, housed under Cornell University's Sage School of Philosophy. We are currently accepting submissions for our Spring 2026 edition. Below is our call for papers.

Logos: The Cornell Undergraduate Philosophy Journal is an annual publication by Cornell University's Sage School of Philosophy. Committed to celebrating the philosophical tradition among undergraduates exclusively, each paper is rigorously reviewed by an editorial board of fellow undergraduates and advisors for argument development and complexity; presentation; and philosophical intrigue.

Logos welcomes a single paper per student of any topic, length, and format, weighing the quality of philosophical ideas above all other considerations. For us, the undergraduate philosophy experience is an endeavor to rigorously engage with the thoughts of philosophers who have come before us, inspiring our own well-developed theses. It is not an attempt to mirror the writing styles of these philosophers.

In keeping with this notion, regardless of whether it is published, each submission will receive an Editors' Note containing our thoughts and feedback on the paper. Additionally, the top three submissions will win cash prizes of $300, $150, $50, respectively.

Please email submissions (preferably as a word attachment) to journal.logos@gmail.com by January 10, 2026, 11:59 pm Eastern Standard Time. Make sure to include your name, institution, and class year in a separate document.

Submissions can also be made online via this page <https://logos.philosophy.cornell.edu/submission-guidelines/>

Questions may be directed to the email address above.

Thank you and good luck!

Corbin Breeden
